NOTED PHOTOGRAPHER

Walter R. Fenley Visits Norway

Walter R. Fenley, the nationally known exponent of artistry in portraiture, has been at the Akers Studio and at Miss Libby's in the interest of the profession. Mr. Fenley is taking a vacation and visiting at the home of Stewart Shaw, Pine Street, South Paris.

Combining business with his vacation, he has secured home sittings of several local people. He has demonstrated that studio conditions are not necessary for artistic results when the work is handled by a specialist in that branch.

Mr. Fenley has made portraits of many notable men and women. Among the number can be mentioned Ex-Pres. Calvin Coolidge, Ex-Governor Ralph Brewster, Senator Hale, Bishop Murry, Ex-Governor Cobb and Rev. Hilda Ives. Many of his finest character studies are often reproduced in the social section of a Portland Sunday newspaper. They can be recognized not only by the "Fenley" imprint, but a distinct touch of an artist is there.

The photographer is a son of Maine, and resides in Portland, when not traveling in this country and abroad for new character studies, particularly individuals. While he handles family groups, yet the latent possibilities in a single face or form appeals to his artistic temperament.

MRS. ELLEN R. STEARNS

Mrs. Ellen R. Stearns, 84, widow of Joseph F. Stearns, late of Lovell, passed away October 2, at the home of her son, Albert J. Stearns, where she and a daughter, Mrs. Herman L. Bartlett, had an apartment.

She had been in failing health for two years after a fall in which her hip was fractured. The past summer was spent at her cottage in Lovell on Lake Kezar. She had a shock a week before her death and failed to rally.

Mrs. Stearns was born in Lovell, Feb. 2, 1847, the daughter of James C. and Marcia Gordon Russell. The deceased was a member of the Congregational Church and for many years had been active in its departments. Mrs. Stearns had resided in Norway for twenty-five years.

She leaves three daughters, Mrs. Herman L. Bartlett, Mrs. Charles L. Bartlett, of Norway; Mrs. Carl E. Stone, of Indianapolis, Ind., and one son, Col. Albert J. Stearns, chairman of the Public Utilities Commission.

The funeral services held Saturday afternoon at the home of her son, were conducted by Rev. Christian Groezinger, pastor of the Norway Congregational Church. There was an abundance of flowers. The bearers were Albert R. Bartlett, a grandson from Portland; M. N. Stearns and L. L. Stearns from Lovell, Edwin S. Cummings, Charles F. Cummings and James N. Favor from Norway. Interment took place at Lovell Center cemetery.

BOY SCOUTS

Enjoyed Hike to World's Fair

Sixteen boys and their scout master, Rev. Conard B. Rheiner, set out on Friday afternoon. Their destination was North Waterford. The last group arrived at nine-thirty, tired, and as everyone thought, sleepy. The troop was granted permission to spread their blankets on the hay stored in the Lord barn. All tried to go to sleep, but few even closed their eyes. Having observed the features of the World's Fair, the boys were carried back to Norway by interested automobilists.

A regular meeting was held on Tuesday night at the Legion Hall at which the boys were introduced to their new assistant scoutmaster, Ernest Moores. The troop is being reorganized and the patrol system incorporated more fully. Each patrol will compete with the others. When the reorganization is completed, this column will tell of the details.

A football team, composed of members of the troop, played its first game on Tuesday afternoon with a team from South Paris. The Boy Scouts were the victors.

Scott W. Martin of South Paris is assisting in the I. G. A. store this week, during the absence of Clifford M. Davis, the proprietor.

Barn Burned at W. F. Young's

Fire Tuesday Night Destroyed Large Modern Barn and Valuable Live Stock

Fire destroyed the barn of William F. Young, on Crockett Ridge, together with a prize bull, "Oxford Ferry Boy", also ten head of cattle and 65 tons of hay, early Tuesday evening. A herd of ten Jersey cows were rescued by neighbors. The fire started in the basement from causes not yet determined and was burning furiously when discovered, soon after six o'clock.

Norway fire department responded with the motor chemical and protected the house. Only a shell of the barn was standing when they arrived. A garage nearly was saved by the bucket brigade.

The barn, 105 feet long and 45 feet wide, built in 1912, at a cost of $6,000, reputed to be the finest in this part of Maine, was thoroughly equipped for dairy business. The interior was finished in hard pine with floor boards of matched lumber and the whole a model of efficiency and convenience. All the equipment was lost.

A prize bull, "Oxford Ferry Boy", son of "Old Oxford Fan Boy", well known at New England fairs, perished. He was owned by David Moulton of Portland. Four heifers, a pair of steers, all blue ribbon Jerseys, also a number of pigs, were lost. A pair of horses were saved.

German police dogs figured in the rescue of the livestock, when they led out the horses and kept the stock from rushing back into the flames.

Willard Young received painful burns on his legs and arms while working with the bucket brigade in the basement.

Total loss is estimated at $20,000, with a reported insurance of $3,000 or less.

CAST FOR "SKIDDING"

Proceeds for Norway Public Library To Purchase Books

There is an old Yankee saying that a community is known first by its public institutions and second by the support that the community gives them. While many communities have better libraries there are few in the state with a better assortment of books to meet the requirements of all, than the local institution, but new books are needed both to replace and enlarge.

A cast is rehearsing a clever, clean, catchy comedy with ten of your favorite amateurs in 'Skidding", a title which thoroughly describes just what each character does at some time during an evening of rare, unusual and perfectly logical comedy, for the purpose of doing their share in procuring these much needed books.

Bargain day is declared when local theatre goers get behind this proposition and enjoy "Skidding" with a skidding cast of Skidders and at the same time back your library with a big audience and big receipts.

A glance at the following cast of characters will convince you that you can't afford to miss "Skidding" and its all star group. Cast:

Aunt Milly ....Eleanor Wood
Andy ....Wilfred Conary, Jr.
Mrs. Hardy..........Esther Tower Anderson
Judge James Hardy ....Dwight Kilgore
Grandpa Hardy ....Clayton Murch
Estelle Hardy Campbell ......Marion Welch
Marion Hardy.............Clara Parnell Cole
Wayne Trenton III.........Stephen Bradeen
Mr. Stubbins........................H. A. Anderson
Myra Hardy Wilcox...Emma Thompson Ledger

Mrs. Charles Willey and daughters, Eleanor and Alberta, of Mechanic Falls, were guests, Sunday and Monday of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Kimball.

Mrs. Ella Watson and Lewis Taylor of Burnham have been visiting Mr. and Mrs. Walter Getchell, Elm street. They attended the World's Fair and enjoyed the experience.

Prizes to be given away at the Firemen's Poverty Ball in the Opera House this Thursday evening have made an attractive display at the E. N. Swett Shoe Co. The articles were a contribution from the Norway merchants, and included, among other things: groceries, blankets, candy, fountain pens, paint, and automobile accessories. Many of the prizes are rewards for the most poverty stricken costumes in the reserved section of the balcony and on the dance floor.

Methodist

Last Sunday was observed as "Rally Day" at the church. In the morning a medium sized audience listened to the pastor's special message on "Jupiter at the Court of Olympus", which was much enjoyed. Mr. Lyon spent much time in the elevating of the teaching profession. In the evening a special program was given at 7 o'clock, the new church time. The junior choir sang a new selection and the Epworth League quartette rendered a pretty "evening song". Mr. Lyon brought a rather humorous, but inspirational message to the young people entitled "Sign Boards", and this was very enthusiastically received. Wallace Frost played a hymn-poem on the zither-harp, accompanied by Miss Ona Yates at the pipe organ, while the pastor sang the vocal solo. Passing of Mellie Dunham

FUNERAL SERMON

At the Universalist Church, Sept. 30, by Rev. C. B. Rheiner:

Text: "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness." Prov. 16.

Certainly Mellie Dunham has lived to have a hoary head. Wherever he went, his snow-white hair was remarked and admired. To reach the age of seventy-eight is a magnificent feat in itself. And such an age leaves its brands. But the significant thing about these is that they are physical—a trembling hand, an uncertain step, a droop of the shoulders, and, above all, as a crown of sparkling diamonds, the whitened hair of the head. But age does not necessarily mean a loss of youth's vitality, cheerfulness, joy in living. Of course, suffering and hardship and increasing poor health may destroy vitality, bring terror and fear, and take away joy and happiness. But Mellie was not so influenced. He retained his enthusiasm, his smile and his zest for life until his last days. Characteristic of his cheerfulness was his acceptance of the hardship which came to him so recently. After the fire which completely destroyed his home and from which only his violins were saved, he said, "There were five of us alive last night and there are five of us alive today. Why pester God for more?"

Mellie's hoary head was truly a crown of glory, because it was found in the way of righteousness. He never stooped to meanness. He not only "lived and let others live" but "he lived and helped others to live." His generosity is considered his vice by those who cannot understand Jesus' injunction, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth, but rather lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." If it is true, as Jean Jacques Rousseau affirms that "every man goes down to the grave, carrying in his clutched hands only that which he has given away," our Mellie goes to his grave with a fabulous spiritual fortune.

When most of the sons of men are tended by loving hands and relieved of active labor, Mellie lived as strenuously as he did in his youth. To give cheer to the multitudes, to help them forget their ills for a moment, is a task to which he devoted his last years. In this task he was rewarded by acclaim everywhere. For our Mellie was a national figure—his name was a household word in millions of American homes and a synonym for wholesome fun.

We remember, then, a man whose presence in the community was an asset of immeasurable value, a friend whose friendship meant more than gifts of gold or silver, or precious jewels, a great grandfather whose life will be an inspiration always, a grandfather whose gifts were greater than his means, because they were of the spirit, a husband who was more than a companion because his marriage brought a unity of two personalities.

We hail today Mellie Dunham, homely philosopher, entertainer to the world, loveable man, and staunch friend.

There are hermit souls that live withdrawn
In the place of their self-content;
There are souls like stars, that dwell apart,
In a fellowless firmament;
There are pioneer souls that blaze their paths
Where highways never ran—
But this soul lived by the side of the road
And was friend to man.
This man lived in a house by the side of the road,
Where the race of men went by—
The men who were good and the men who were bad,
As good and as bad as I.
He would not sit in the scorners' seat,
Nor hurl the cynic's ban—
This man lived in a house by the side of the road,
And was a friend to man.

Gleanings from the Press

"Mellie" Dunham, champion old-time fiddler of the State of Maine, who won nation-wide fame and more than $20,000 in 1925, when Henry Ford sent for him to come to Detroit to fiddle his repertoire of dance tunes, died Sunday, Sept. 27, after a brief illness. He was seventy-eight years old. With him when the end came was "Gram" Dunham, his wife for more than fifty years, who accompanied him on his visit to Mr. Ford, and through the triumphal stage tour that followed.

This last year the fortune that suddenly smiled on "Mellie and Gram" in their old age, after lives of hard work, deserted them. Their homestead at Norway, Me., where "Mellie" was born, July 29, 1853, burned down. All the souvenirs of his great adventure in the nation's eye were destroyed. About all he saved was his four precious fiddles.

The Dunham home where Alanson Mellon Dunham was born stood for more than a century on Crockett Ridge, about six miles from Norway. State officials estimate that "Mellie", during his brief fame, brought Norway and the state more than $1,000,000 worth of newspaper publicity. But "Mellie" had been renowned locally with very little financial return since the age of fourteen. That was when he began to fiddle at the old fashioned barn dances of this region.

"Mellie" never took a lesson in his life, he used to say, and he never could read music. He used simply to play by ear the tunes he heard when he was a boy. He first gained prominence when he won a contest for fiddlers at Auburn, Me.

"Mellie's" father was Alanson Mellon Dunham, and his grandfather was a Revolutionary patriot. The father was a typical New England farmer, but "Mellie" varied farming with the making of snowshoes and playing for dances. His skill at snowshoe making brought him some repute, as a pair of snowshoes he made were worn by Admiral Peary in the trek to the North Pole. On his visit to Henry Ford, he presented a pair of snowshoes he had made to the automobile manufacturer, and on his way to Detroit he was feted by the Canadian Snowshoe Club of Montreal for his skill as a snowshoe maker. The "diamond weave", which is usual on high grade snowshoes today, is said in this region to have been developed by "Mellie", but he said modestly that it was handed down to him by an old-time settler.

Prior to gaining national fame he was known through Maine as the "Noway fiddler". He traveled through the state back of an old black horse—or a succession of black horses—fiddling at dances for the usual $3 a night and a bowl of clam chowder. Short in stature and with smiling face and body plump from contented living, "Mellie" needed only a beard to pass for Santa Claus.

Fame did not change him. He and "Gram" have been just the "folks" since their trip through the spotlight that they were before. His neighbors, around the ruins of the home which in recent years attracted hundreds of tourists, are going to grieve a great deal for "Mellie", remembering the tunes he played and the friendly spirit of the player.

"Turkey in the Straw", "Devil's Dream" and "Boston Fancy". These tunes are still revived here at dances occasionally by jazz bands and others, but anybody who ever heard "Mellie" play them always will recall him, and they

Mr. nd Mrs. E. K. Shedd of Bisbeetown visited her daughter, Mrs. Ernest Brown, and family, Sunday, Oct. 4.

Ezra Lebroke has had some fall plowing done; Ernest Grover and Frank Hatch, with Win Brown's team, did the work.

John Freeman does not improve very much; he is a great care for Mr. and Mrs. Lebroke.

Beatrice Canwell and little niece, Ida May Bird, are having the whooping cough. Where they contracted the disease is a mystery, as they had seen no one with the trouble, nor had been any place where it was supposed to be. It is pretty hard for the little one as she is only about three or four months old.

Ernest Grover carried Ezra Lebroke to Norway, October 3, and Mr. Lebroke bought a new plough.

Mrs. Wilson is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Will Rickett and family. She came October 3. Walter Canwell met her at Bethel and brought her to Mr. Rickett's.

Mrs. Nora Dresser of North Waterford solicited food of all kinds for the church Circle at North Waterford, who served their usual meals at the vestry during the World's Fair, Friday and Saturday, Oct. 2nd and 3rd. This call is usually responded to freely and seldom, if ever, do they fall short of food to feed the multitudes to which they cater every year at this place.

The frequent rains which we have been having for some weeks past, have kept the foliage green and as there has been no severe frost the autumn coloring does not show very fast. A few trees are beginning to turn bright and seem like a flame among the green.

Crops are being harvested and are well along out of the way of a frost; some have finished digging their potatoes and others are just beginning.

Arthur Churchill of Albany was at North Waterford on business, Oct. 3.

Ezra Lebroke and Ernest Grover attended the I. O. O. F. meeting at No. 4 Lovell, Saturday, Oct. 3, and report an interesting session.

Mrs. James Kimball and Mrs. Roy Wardwell attended the annual meeting of the Albany Circle at Mrs. Nancy Andrews' at Hunt's Corner, recently. Mrs. Wardwell is president of the Circle.

Roy Wardwell has given the writer a bunch of gladioli from his large beds. There are many different varieties from the little delicate ones that look like small bells hung on the stalk and as though a breeze might set them ringing, to the big glorious blooms that measure over five inches across the petals and are in all colors from the dainty orchid and cream to the deep rich red and purple; so many different tints one never could describe them all. Mr. Wardwell is an enthusiast with these flowers and has wonderful success with them.

E. C. Henley has been getting out cedar poles for the New England Tel. and Tel. Co.

Theodore Brown has finished work on the state road for Spaulding Abbott. Don Brown is still at work there.

SUMNER

Donald Varney's trucks finished hauling the spool stock, Saturday, the last from the Tebbets birch mill, here. The Tebbets spool mill at Locke Mills is quite a big haul at that, as there were squares that were sawed this last spring from a little better than one thousand cords of birch, beach and maple logs.

A Graham Bros. truck belonging to Newton Stowell of Dixfield, frequently goes past here with a load of birch logs from the Tebbets birch mill on its way to Bath. It is said Mr. Stowell has bought all of the edgings in the yard and the large truck they carry three cords and on the trailer one cord.

This week Donald Varney's trucks are hauling cord wood from the Green Wood lot for the Penley Bros., to Lewiston. It is said there is one hundred cords to haul, which is a matter of a few days work for the trucks. Donald has had the drivers this past season such experienced handlers of motor vehicles as that of trusty Carl Bonney, Charlie Farrar, Reginald Ford and Earl Bonney; the latter sometimes spoken of as the auto polo artist.

Last Saturday morning Mr. and Mrs. George Spaulding and mother, Mrs. Pingland, started out on a business trip through Canton, Dixfield, Rodomville and into Rumford, returning through the Green Woods, called on Mr. and Mrs. Emerson Bartlett just to say how do, with the next stop home.

Mrs. Evie Varney and son, Floyd spent Saturday evening at Mr. and Mrs. Emerson Bartlett's.

Sunday callers at Bartlett's were Archie Hebert and Mr. Hayes, Rumford, two fellow workmen formerly at the old Oxford, Mr. and Mrs. John Roche and two daughters, Rumford, and Mrs. Roche's brother, Mr. McDonald, Mexico; Mr. Wood of Prince Edwards Island, and Miss Roche of Rumford. Mr. McDonald and friend, Rumford, and Mr. and Mrs. Allen McDonald, Rumford. Mr. McDonald has worked in the Oxford mill nearly twenty years, having commenced nearly at the bottom of the ladder, then rushed up to paymaster at the Oxford time office, from there to the main office, where he has for several years held a very responsible position, but that was not good enough, so nearly a year ago the management fired him from the main office just across the isle to be seated in the superintendent's office of Theodore Spear, where Messrs. Spear and McDonald are the only occupants of this magnificent room. Mac, so called by nearly everyone, is an old time mate friend of the writer and is a pleasant and agreeable and just a common man to meet anywhere, though well up in society. He takes great pleasure in meeting and talking with the common working people. Mac says probably Rumford and the Old Oxford are not the hard hit, at the same time there have been many rumors started that should not have been. He also says when the Oxford was supposed to have been down the pay roll for that week was fifteen thousand dollars.

Lionel, Irvin and Jerry Bartlett began cutting birch for Joseph Bosse in the Green Woods, Monday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Waterhouse and children of Locke Mills and Miss Grace Bartlett, who is stopping with Mrs. Waterhouse for a time, called upone Grace's father and mother, Sunday afternoon.

The Norway Advertiser will be sent to you for twelve months on exchange of two dollars. Hand to the correspondent, or send to office direct.

Ivan Kimball of Albany was a caller, Monday afternoon to pay up his subscription for the paper. Ivan is an ardent hunter and fisherman and he reported shooting a partridge on his way to Norway and that he had previously shot two this season.

Annie Wing called in Monday morning and showed two handsome pink and white apple blossoms she picked from the tree which was also bearing fruit. They were sweet scented and seemed "just like spring".

At no time of the year do we have finer days than about this time and throughout the rest of the month. Glorious is a good adjective to apply to the last few days when the clear sunshine and the little tang of fall in the air have made all outdoors a wonderful place and we regret that more of our summer friends cannot be here to enjoy the incomparable climate of Maine at this season.

Lawrence Trumbull of the Trumbull Players dropped in Monday and placed his advertising for the play in Association Hall this Friday night. The drama, "The Ruined Lady" is a comedy, full of pep and is unusual. On Oct. 23 the players will say goodbye for the season. They will present "It Won't Be Long Now", a title suggesting plenty of laughs and amusing situations. After that tour, Dr. Trumbull (for he is an M. D.) will take up the practice of his profession for the winter in Wellesley, Mass., and looking forward to a return next summer.

Kingsbury, Cal., To Board of Trade, Norway, Me., Dear Sirs: I read a small notice in our daily paper about the death of C. A. Stephens. As I have read the "Youth's Companion" for over forty years, I am very interested to know more in detail about him. Where can I get some information? Has your local paper a write-up about him? If so please let me know. I will be glad to buy any papers or books printed about this noble writer which we and our children admire so much. Our two sons took a trip from California to Maine in 1925. They called on Mr. C. A. Stephens and were at the "Old Home Farm". If you can give this information we will be very thankful. Mrs. R. G. Smith, Kingsbury, Cal.

This letter was handed us by Glenn R. McIntire and our Advertiser containing Mr. Stephen's obituary sent her.

H. E. Ludlow of Coral Gables, Fla., writes the following letter to R. H. Eastman, first selectman of Norway: 'A distinguished citizen of your loyalty has passed out, the friend of several generations of boys and girls, of which I am one. I should like a paper containing his obituary. I am taking for granted that your newspaper will pay him high tribute and include some interesting life history. If so will you please send me two copies and a bill of cost, please?

"By the way, the "Old Farm" series of stories which have appeared in book form and are actually New England history, and doubtless will be found in libraries for the next several generations. On the other hand, there are volumes of tales having their scene of action in many parts of the globe that would make interesting reading for the youth of our land for years to come, as well as for today. What do you know about that old manuscript, is there not a group of your citizens who would gladly sponsor a movement for compiling and putting in book form the cream of this long series? I have no doubt but subscriptions from school children over this country would easily pay for the labor and material, and then the advertising given it would sell thousands of volumes. No place for the beginning of such a movement is quite so good as your own. After talking this over with some of your leading citizens, let me know, please how it appeals to them.

"Just as an indication of how sensitive these old friends of C. A. Stephens' are, yesterday in our Sunday school, the mention of the passing of this man brought an immediate response from everybody save the younger members."

Excitement for Monday was a fist fight on Main Street, after school. Two young girls attempted to settle a dispute. They squared off man-fashion and pitched in with jabs and haymakers right on the jaws. The affair went into a clinch and fall, both regained their feet and renewed the uppercuts. Spectators let 'em fight a finished match.

Mr. and Mrs. George Wood and daughter, Marion, of Dunston, were week end guests of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. Robert Seavey, at Beals Tavern.

A letter from Gus C. Bender, Pilgrim Avenue, Bronx, N. Y. City, tells of his arrival home after a summer of wandering through Maine, Vermont and New York state in search of work and experience. Bender and his buddy, Edward Hannigan, found Norway early in the summer. They joined a circus which was dropped in New Hampshire. Farm work was secured in Vermont, then followed a job at Saratoga, N. Y., in a lunch wagon. Mr. Bender is a born traveler, having covered the country on foot from California to British Columbia and spent considerable time as a harvester and rancher. He has a trip laid out for next summer to Mexico, then across country to Canada with a swing into Maine to visit Norway friends. Probably an auto camping outfit will be used for this long journey.

Passing of Mellie Dunham

won't get the same thrill from hearing his successors. People here never took much stock in the claim of "Uncle John" Wilder, uncle of Calvin Coolidge, that he was a better fiddler than "Mellie". The "fiddler of Norway" was the greatest in his line, and the fiddling line is practically ended. —N. Y. Tribune.

Mellie Dunham's Heaven

If there is a street in heaven where a musician may have his choice of the golden harp or some other instrument, Mellie Dunham will be playing a fiddle. Mellie's music was not the soulful voice of a violin virtuoso; he made no claim to virtu. The famed fiddler who died Sunday in Maine at the age of seventy-eight, made no attempt to exalt his artistry. "I don't pretend to be a musician," he said; "I'm just a fiddler." But to thousands his fiddling was a bit of heaven. It had the swinging rhythm of the friendly fiddle melodies that inspire dancing feet. It won Mellie Dunham a fiddler's championship, recognition by Henry Ford, success in vaudeville, a national audience and popular acclaim.

Mellie did two things better than others. He made snowshoes that none of the craft could surpass; he drew a bow across fiddle strings with a touch that many violinists might envy and an understanding of musical vigor that few jazz kings could equal. One can move more feet with fiddle strings than with snowshoes, and so Mellie with "Gram" —his wife—for partner and guardian, took his lively tunes, "learned by hearin' others" who could read music, to thousands of his countrymen, young and old. They delighted in talking strings that awakened memories or enlivened sleeping rhythmic sense. And thus Mellie and "Gram" became loved characters, fairly symbolic of old-time community neighborliness and the music that cheered it.

Mellie Dunham heard lively tunes, cheerful tunes, friendly tunes. He memorized them and gave them to the ears of others. He did it well. It is a good thing to save the best that comes one's way to give back to the world. Perhaps his fiddling will be immortal—it would be heaven for Mellie.

—Philadelphia Bulletin.

The Boston Sunday Herald had the following to say: In an ironic sort of way, Mellie Dunham's death proved that he was an artist. If he had left a tidy sum on which "Gram" could live in comfort, most people would have said, "Well, he was certainly a smart Yankee who knew how to turn a bit of good fortune into the coin of the realm". But it seems that the $25,000 or so that the "old-time fiddler" received after Henry Ford and the newspapers had made him famous, disappeared almost as quickly as it came. Not that Mellie intended that it should go, but somehow it just did. One doesn't like to be stingy with gifts that the gods have placed in one's lap!

That is why all the fabulous salaries of actors, musicians and other celebrities must be discounted with a great deal of salt. Five hundred dollars a week sounds like Big Money, and in the original pay envelope, it is. But, once in the wallet or checking account, how fast it goes. To be sure, due to certain special arrangements, Mellie escaped the usual demands of agents and managers, and his living expenses, even while he and "Gram" were on their theatrical tour were relatively modest. There was enouyh of the easy-going generosity of the artist in him to permit the money to disappear in a dozen mysterious ways. It was simpler and more pleasant to let it go than to make a fuss, especially when the neighbors thought he had more than his share of good fortune. But we have no fears about "Gram's" declining years. Her Maine friends will see that she has everything she needs and a little bit more.

Dedicated to Mellie Dunham

There's another that's heard the trumpet;
Gone to sleep in perfect rest,
Though the body in earth's bosom is nestled,
The soul has gone to a better test.
He has crossed the River Jordan,
To leave all earthly things behind,
Gone to join the staff of a Master,
With his music: so sublime.
We will miss his honest character,
And his quaint old Yankee ways;
The eyes that sparkle with ever kindness,
And the voice with wit to display.
Born within a country village,
No chance for the public to peek in
To see a life so simple, so happy,
Known only by friends and kin.
Through the touch of a master hand,
Played the music of a by-gone day;
Music so touching to the heartstrings of many,
Made them brush often, a tear away.
"Mellie" and "Gram", a most loveable couple,
With their Yankee wit they won their own;
Getting plaudits, cheers from a loving people,
As he rendered some sweet old tone.
Mellie Dunham, we'll think of you always,
Down through our declining years;
With your violin and nimble fingers
Played music to captivate the public ear.

Charles F. Jones says in the Portland News: "Two or three years ago while fishing at anchor in seven feet of water off my camp at East Sebago. Financial Problems

By R. L. Cummings of West Paris

We have heard many times about dragging the "Red Herring" across the trail to throw everything off the scent. The efficacy of this scheme is now to be tried on a world-wide basis. For months this particular herring has been in preparation against a time of desperate need.

50,000 unemployed people rioting in Glasgow against the enforced reduction of their bread supply to allow the government to negotiate a new loan from our "American World Bankers" of some $400,000,000, while their government tumbles from the gold standard and their pound sterling that was the fixed standard of values of the world for generations, being practically a $5. note has tumbled to a value in the markets of the world of $3.80 and is teetering like a bobtailed pullet on a rickety hen roost and no one knows where she will land. Of course our great bankers will see that their little loan of a few billions of dollars are to be paid in "gold" with great interest, while they insist that the foreign loans to our government (the people) which have been more than half cancelled by free forgiveness, must be indefinitely postponed in order that theirs may be more secure and pay higher interest.

Another noteworthy preparation in the recent cut in wages of 10 per cent., in our great industries that have greatly reduced their number of employees, they now discover that what is wanted is cheaper money. Inflation of the currency. Re-monetization of silver. Sure enough! Cut all wages 10 per cent and then make a dollar worth only 75c and you will have the wage-earner just where you want him. Then you can put wheat back to $1.00 per bushel and the farmer will only be able to buy 75c worth of goods with his dollar, but you think it will tickle him just the same.

Why this desperate need of fooling the poor old world again? Well, the people all over the world have become convinced that the trouble with the world is the concentration of the wealth of the world in the hands of a few people, and that business cannot revive and "prosperity be passed around" until that wealth is in some way placed in circulation and gets into the hands of those people who will buy something with it. You see the "Fox" is getting pretty close to his hole, pretty well surrounded and the baying of the dogs reaches his ears.

In this great crisis no less a person than the American Sphinx of world finance, J. P. Morgan, opens his mouth to endorse inflation or re-monetization of silver.

If William Jennings Bryan does not rise and speak it will be considered sufficient proof that no earthly sounds can awake the dead. The sight and sound of this is the equivalent of the man with his family fleeing from the wolves and when the pursuit is close, throws over one of his own children to slow down the pack.

It means that they are acknowledging the validity of Greenbackism, Populism, Rag Money and Free Silver, if they only can put it on the boards in their way and still control the finances of the world as they now have them. They hope to bring the central west and the silver producing states to their support; or is it just another bluff put over as for the election of President Coolidge when they circularized the country from Maine to California to find out just what was the matter with agriculture and then to give it its dues?

However, this old staggering world is getting tired of empty promises and the rule of the world by "International Bankers" and beginning to see what Theodore Roosevelt meant when he said "The sinister alliance between crooked business and crooked politics has done more than all else for the corruption of American life.

Our Federated Churches—The Pope of Rome and every far-seeing economist and statesman of the world are still arguing to the men of billionaire and multi-millionaire class to put their business in order to serve mankind or face the deluge. But all that those people can so far seem to see is some form of super Government composed of a part of their own gang, called an advisory board, which, in order to have any effect at all would be simply a dictatorship, while all that our loyal men that have been boosted into office can think of is "Vote Yes for the Code Bill" and guard your home and nation from the terrible Bolsheviki and Communism and maintain the rights of any man or group of men to gain the whole world and let the worthless unthinking people go hang.

WORLD'S FAIR

Fine Exhibit—Big Crowd—Many Attractions—Perfect Weather

North Waterford village, the home of the famous street show, known far and wide as the World's Fair, again entertained a multitude Friday and Saturday, Oct. 2-3. Perfect weather, yet a trifle warm for the season, set people moving toward the village green, where two acres of fakirs were set for high pressure business.

As usual Friday was the set-up day with activity in every department, and a good crowd meandered around the square. Pulling oxen was the only sport listed for the opening day and not finished at sunset.

More than 5,000 people, according to estimates, thronged the place, Saturday. They arrived early and remained until sundown. The midway was a regular bee hive with a variety of attractions and coin catchers. Up in the hall one of the best exhibits ever assembled at this fair received many visitors and compliments. Baseball and pulling horses in the afternoon drew a throng to Willis McKeen's pasture above the church. Nearby was a nice entry of neat stock numbering about 100 head being larger and better than in past years.

No person need go hungry for the Congregational church ladies had bushels of bean hole beans prepared by Herman Holt and Ernest Grover. The dining room was in charge of Mrs. C. A. Hersey, Mrs. Charles Saunders and Mrs. Herman Holt, with a corps of helpers. Charles A. Hersey sold tickets as usual. He has been on the door many years and catered to at least three generations with the fourth not many years behind taxable age.

Mr. and Mrs. William Rice of Norway opened the Forrest House or Rice Tavern for fair week. They furnished board and rooms. The ancient stage tavern recently passed its one hundredth birthday and stands as a landmark. Shutters are up during the year, but the sound of human activity rings through the halls when the concessionaires move into the village.

Dinners and suppers were served in many private houses and with a score of lunch counters on the midway, the opportunities to feast for a fair price were everywhere.

Everybody was tagged, or supposed to be. Handicapped by regulations, reported to be a new state law forbidding the sale of tags on the highway, the officials made their sales at the hall entrance; on the pulling grounds and at points out of the highway limits. Heretofore ticket officers on vantage spots along three or four roads leading into the square were profitable business centers.

HALL

Odd Fellows Hall was crowded with the products of two Granges, the schools, and the farm and home. More room could have been used to advantage, but the committee utilized every foot of space and presented one of the best representative displays ever offered at the World's Fair.

Round Mountain Grange of Albany occupied one side in a background of blue, with beautifully tinted gladioli, banked in one corner. About everything raised on the land or produced in the dairy and farm house was represented by at least one sample. Roy Wardwell let the people in on the secret of raising tobacco. He had one tall plant in bloom with leaves ready to be picked and cured.

Norway Grange had considerable space on the opposite side and featured a setting of white with a trace of light green. Articles on display were carefully selected and arranged with great taste, not depending on quantity, but on skillful arrangement.

The general exhibits of vegetables, fruit and cut flowers, also the fancy articles and school handiwork, had been selected for quality. A representative from the State department at Augusta, who judged the farm and orchard products spoke highly of the exhibits.

Some of the outstanding features were large pumpkins and squashes. Alfred Littlefield, North Waterford, offered a monster squash, which weighed forty-three and one-half pounds. Other big ones were shown by L. W. Marston, East Waterford, Mattie Fox, East Stoneham, and Ira Andrews, North Lovell. Guy W. Bancroft, true to his promise, brought three Albino pumpkins, colorless and waxlike. The kind of pies they might produce is guess work until a trial can be made.

Roy Wardwell's display of gladiolus that escaped killing frosts was a real attraction to flower lovers who grow the blooms.

PULLING

The oxen and steers opened the program on the course in the Willis McKeen field, Friday. Aside from being a trifle too dry the surface was in prime condition for the test of good teaming and sturdy qualities.

At least 2,000 witnessed the sport Saturday afternoon with the great shown during the free-for-all, which was a climax for a strong program. Competition was keen in the heavy weights, especially the 3,000 and under class and sweepstake.

Speeding up the events was done by the use of a truck to haul the load back to the starting line after every pull. As one remarked: "Not so romantic as six yoke of oxen, but more expedient."

THE MIDWAY

Fakirs, concessions, side shows and lunch counters were on every hand. Beano was the popular game, with three places going full blast.

An athletic arena, where wrestlers exerted most of their energy drumming up trade attracted fair business. Two sideshows of the pit variety had a lot to say about man-eating creatures, safely chained for inspection.

The merry-go-round and chair plane offered rides, the former being the most attractive proposition.

Herbert I. Bean of Bethel had a tent tent filled with hunting equipment, rifles and shot guns. Mrs. Walter Getchell of Norway gave away sample packages of Flash, a washing powder she sells during the year. L. M. Longley & Son, Norway, operated a pump and water system and talked up the qualities of Cop-R-Loy roofing. Herbert Butler and Forrest Longley were the operators and orators.

Palmists had the vantage points covered along with the tintype shooter and guess-your-weight operator. Toy balloons, whistling birds, novelties, lapel buttons, banners, canes and some less than a million other knick-knacks were everywhere.

Agony-Gash-Um, an Indian entertainer, known in private life as Frederick Marshall Davis, formerly of Norway, was the headliner with Chief Welch, otherwise "Doc" Millett of Portland. The chief dispensed medicine while "Agony" strummed a banjo, sang comic songs and passed wise cracks.

A snake oil vender held his crowd with a collection of genuine rattlers and a generous display of rattlesnake skins pinned on a blanket background. Truly the afflicted were cared for in the array of cure-dills up and down the line.

Eatables abounded and included dogs, ice cream, peanuts, popcorn for staple food augmented by combinations with tempting names and uncertain digestive properties. Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Richardson of Norway carried on a nice lunch business as in past years. William Carrigan of Portland was at the same old stand, handing out soft drinks, smokes, etc. He was one of the few old timers left on the midway.

R. M. Dubois sold a poultry journal to subscribers. He also represented the Billboard, a theatrical journal, well known to the profession, and secured interesting copy for the show people.

Men's clothing, grass and willow baskets, government goods, fruit, bees' honey, ox goads, corn remedy, fountain pens, jumping beans, glass cutters and tire cement were assembled into a bewildering mass like scenery, during a speedy auto trip.

NOTES

Cruelty agent Melvin Morey was on duty around the pulling stretch, but had little official work to do.

Oxford County sheriffs' department provided several deputies for the grounds. No serious trouble was reported.

The report that hereafter the fair will be held in some enclosure and removed from the Square gained some headway on Saturday. Officials state the plan has been seriously considered, but as yet no definite action taken. Good reasons have been offered for getting the show into fenced grounds. Equally good reasons have been advanced why that action might kill the freedom and spirit of the World's Fair and keep many people away. Suggesting the McKeen pasture be acquired for the fair grounds with exhibition and dining hall erected on the ridge led to the report that it was an assured fact. Restricting the sale of tags may speed up the plans that have been a matter of controversy the past two years. The present street show is a novelty and unique in many respects. Many claim that a change will put it in the class of other fenced-in attractions and destroy the "pulling power."

ROADS FOR EVERYBODY

One of the present farm problems is the lack of year-round, weatherproof roads, affording quick and economical transportation, at all times to and from markets.

Less than 500,000 American farms are situated on roads usable every day in the year. Two and three-quarter million are on unimproved dirt roads, which become a series of mud-holes in the winter, and about 2,000,000 are on roads where but little improvement has been made. All in all, it is stated on the authority of the American Farm Bureau Federation, less than five per cent of the farmers of the country have access to roads that they can rely on using any and every day, irrespective of weather and seasonal conditions.

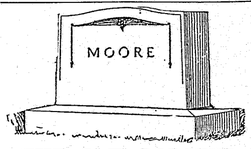

High-type main highways cost in the neighborhood of forty thousand dollars a mile. But modern developments have produced bituminous materials that now make it possible to build good secondary roads for $4,000 a mile—an eighth or less of the cost of hard pavement. Upkeep cost is likewise extremely low, and economy is further advanced by the fact that each road may be adapted to the characteristics of local soils and materials used for bases.

Such roads, of course, are not suitable for extremely heavy traffic. But new surface can be laid on as traffic increases—something of an installment-buying basis for highways. In this way almost every rural area can be adequately provided with weatherproof feeder roads without going in for heavy bond issues or materially increasing the tax burden.

If everyone in the course of their various duties adhered to the above slogan, life would be indeed much rosier and pleasant.
Mr. R. L. If you have not had a ride in the new Chevrolet, you don't know what you have missed in car comfort at a price that is within the range of all, no mistake was made in making this car known to all as the Great American Value. If you have not had the opportunity of riding in a new Chevrolet and are in the market for a car that is not only economical, but right up to the minute as well, phone 377 and Mr. Sturgis will be more than glad to give you a demonstration.

Camp McWain
East Waterford, Maine
Camp McWain, Lake McWain, East Waterford, for girls six to sixteen years, has carried on a conscientious program of camp development in which each girl has close personal contact with the best of counsellors and with the directors.
Although Camp McWain is in the heart of the camping region, it is of itself isolated and away from distractions not in harmony with the natural setting, approximately 700 feet above sea level.
Purpose of the camp is to give more than a vacation. It aims to provide an atmosphere to encourage habits of self-reliance, loyalty, sportsmanship, as well as physical and mental development through outdoor life under well trained counsellors.
The girls are divided into groups according to age and ability. Rest periods before meal time are compulsory and each girl is carefully guarded against accidents and sickness.
George R. Howe of Norway, a scientist of note, is in personal charge of the nature study from actual plants and minerals. Trips are taken to the localities where the specimens may be studied first hand and collections made.
The creed of Camp McWain is short and expressive:
"To find joy and maintain health by contact with the Great Outdoors.
"To form lifelong friendships with camp associates.
"To develop strength and poise by well regulated sports and activities.
"To enjoy a truly homelike atmosphere and learn to live as one big family."
These are the ideals of Camp McWain.
Miss Helen M. Sanderson is director and Miss Mary E. Marshall, superintendent.

"The Banks of Service"
On July 25 of the present year Norway National Bank, the Paris Trust Company and the Casco Mercantile Trust Co., of Portland, consolidated, representing resources of more than $25,000,000.
This consolidation has added financial strength to the local banks and makes possible larger business transactions. All of the officers and directors are local business men and for the most part have been associated with the Norway and South Paris units for some years.
The departments handled are Savings Accounts paying 3 1-2 per cent, four months from date of deposit; checking accounts; safe deposits and a Christmas Club. The bond and trust departments are featured.
The Norway National Bank unit was organized in 1872, with the late Howard D. Smith its cashier for fifty years. He was succeeded by his son, Fred E. Smith, who held that responsible position to the date of consolidation. The business outgrew its quarters several times, and now owns the bank block on Main Street, corner Cottage Street.
Paris Trust Co. was incorporated in 1908 and has doubled its business several times. The first rooms in the Pythian Block were found too small and the business is now transacted in a modern office in Association Block.
The vaults at both units are protected by modern electrical devices and fireproof. Business is transacted locally by local officers aided by the support and advice of the Portland headquarters, when desired.

The Exiled Acadians

By C. F. Whitman

Chapter XIII

Stackpole Decides to Follow the Fugitives

As John and Marie went away together, she asked: "Why have you changed your mind, John, for us not to go with mother and the others into the woods?"

John: "Because, dear, they are not after flowers today, but are going to get away if they can, and to your father in new homes in the Madawaska country, and I didn't want you to go with them as you might have taken a notion to do."

Marie: "What would you have done if I had gone with mother?"

John: "I should have followed you and after making you my wife with your parents consent, we would have come back."

Marie: "Oh John, since you care for me so much and I have such a nice home, I have made no mistake in staying here. But how did you learn that mother and the other Acadians were going away and leave me here?"

John: "I met, by accident, this morning, Marquette and Quanto, and upon Marquette's bidding me farewell, I asked him what it all meant and trusting me, as he might well do, he told me on my pledge of secrecy, all about it. So I thought it but best, dear, that we go away by ourselves. Oh, isn't it fine, Marie? I hope they will all get away in safety and if they do, sometime after the war is over, we will go to see them in their new homes."

Marie: "That will be grand. Aunty is going to take the loss of Jean and Fay to heart for she thought so much of them —especially Jean. But let us gather the flowers and return to the house." But John was in no hurry to go back and it was much later than the middle of the afternoon when they reached home with a large basket full of sweet scented spring flowers. Mr. and Mrs. Granby knew that John and Marie had gone away by themselves and no questions were asked them about the others. But Marie couldn't let the matter rest that way any longer, and she took Mrs. Granby to her room and told her that her mother and the other Acadians had gone away and would try to get to her father in the Madawaska country by the way of Quebec and that she had refused to go with them and would stay and become John's wife. She unburdened her heart to Mrs. Granby and gave her all the information she had of the affair including John's meeting with Marquette and Quanto in the morning, and the reason, at John's suggestion, why they two had gone away by themselves. The good lady's heart was touched at the thought that Marie could see her own mother and brother start off to rejoin her father with no wish to go with them and was content to remain and make her home with the Granbys, that she clasped the young girl to her heart with tears in her eyes and carressing her exclaimed: "I'll be a mother to you, my daughter, as long as I live. You did just right in telling me. You have made no mistake in remaining with us. I'm glad your mother and the others have gone. It's wicked to keep them here in a species of slavery and I hope they will get away in safety." To this the girl said: Oh mother, I'm so glad to hear you say that. It is just like you, so loveable and good. You have been a mother to me from the time I came into the house a poor prisoner with John. You have all been so good to me. My heart is here now, though I'd dearly like to see father, but I couldn't go away. Indeed I couldn't. I'll be a good daughter to you as long as you live."

Mrs. Granby at once went to her husband to tell him what she had learned. He was considerably surprised as may well be supposed, but expressed his gratification that Marie had refused to go away with her mother and had remained behind with them. He also expressed himself as heartily approving of the Acadians going to their new homes among their own people, and emphatically declared that it would be a great wrong for anyone to try to prevent the exiles from getting away.

Just after tea time and the sun had set, Aunt Betsey Phillips, getting anxious about her wards not having returned from their supposed outing, called at the Granbys to find out whether they had any idea what was keeping them so late and was nearly prostrated when told that the Acadians had gone with the purpose to reach new homes in the Madawaska country, leaving Marie behind, who declined to go with them on account of her affection for John. Her brother declared that it was just and right for the Acadians to do as they had done, in going away to their own people; that it was a wicked thing in the first place to tear them away from their homes and force them to live in a foreign land, among a strange, if not hostile people and that it would be little short of a crime for anyone to try and stop them. Mrs. Granby thereupon, as decidedly stated that the curse of God would follow those who would endeavor to prevent the exiles from getting away to their own people.

Mrs. Phillips went home to struggle as best she could between her sorrow at the loss of her wards, and the rightfulness of the Acadians to get back again among their own people. The counsel of her brother and the pointed declaration of her sister-in-law that the curse of God would follow those who tried to bring back the exiles finally won her over to that way of thinking, though she mourned then and for many months at the loss of her dear ones, whom she had come to regard with a motherly affection. Aunt Betsey, when she had espoused a cause, was a power in the community and this was intensified by the fact that she was a great worker in church matters and was supposed to represent in some degree the views of her brother on public matters.

That evening there was a religious meeting at the church, at which all the prominent citizens attended. Notwithstanding that the Sabbath had set in and no secular matters were allowed to be talked about, the thought uppermost in every mind was about the Acadians who had not returned from their outing. Several suspicious circumstances had come to the minds of some of the most knowing ones, including the pastor and deacon—the fact of Marquette's returning with a strange Indian, who kept secluded and their secretly stealing away again, being the most prominent. Seeing Marie with the Granbys as usual, deepened curiosity and there was a suspicion, also in the minds of the minister and Sergeant Stackpole, particularly, that they must know what the disappearance of the Acadians meant. The pastor for a long time had felt that they were making no real headway in converting this alien people due largely to the course pursued with them, and to Mr. Granby's advice and influence. He considered it a proper occasion to make some pointed remarks, giving the reasons why they had failed and what course should have been taken from the first to convert them and did so. He closed his talk with the statement that if their absence was an attempt to get away, they should be followed and brought back and other methods taken to convert them. Although no names were mentioned, all felt that the pastor's remarks were a reflection upon Mr. Granby. That gentleman's temper was unruffled, however, but Aunt Betsey bristled with indignation and she was ready to free her mind to Sergeant Stackpole, who had quietly intimated that he wished to have a word with her when the others had started for home and were out of hearing. To his inquiries, she said that from certain things she had noticed, there was little doubt in her mind that the Acadians had gone to rejoin their own people, but that while she keenly felt the loss of her wards, whom she dearly loved, if they had really gone she thought that they had a right to go and that the curse of God would surely follow whoever tried to stop them. This was a stunner for the Sergeant and he dropped the conversation with her and hurried away to overtake his wife who had gone on ahead. He had hoped to learn something about the exiles and Mr. Granby's mind in the matter, but he got much more than he cared to hear. The next day at the meetings nothing was said about the Acadians who had not, of course, returned. After sunset and a conference with the pastor, Stackpole went to work to get his company together, equipped, rationed and ready to start early on the following forenoon after the fugitives. And this was done.

On Dr. Chas. A. Stephens

Sayings of the Listener in the Boston Transcript—Other Clippings

A very considerable literary talent was diverted into a special line, and that not an important one, in the case of Charles Asbury Stephens, who died at Norway, Me., the other day. Stephens was a Maine boy, of a most inventive mind and a sort of natural instinct for graphic writing, who had graduated from Bowdoin College in 1869. One of the professors at that alma mater of Hawthorne and Longfellow had somehow put into young Stephen's head the idea of writing for the young, and in pursuance of an intention to do that he found his way, in 1871, into the well-guarded sanctum in Boston of Daniel S. Ford, proprietor and editor of the Youth's Companion. Mr. Ford had a weird way of recognizing, in any literary visitor that he had, either the possession or the destitution of the particular kind of talent that he wanted, and he recognized its possession in the case of young Stephens. Ford afterward said of Stephens, "I hired him." He did hire him and apparently he hired him body and soul for life. After that, for about fifty years and until after Ford was dead, Stephen's pen and mind and efforts, belonged to Ford. All these were most prolific. For a long time, Stephens was under contract to produce for the Youth's Companion sixty short stories, or installments of serial stories, a year. And he kept his contract. The yarns that he produced and published would fill up the Encyclopedia Britannica from the first page of its A's to the last of its Z's.

Stephens' great talent was for adventure stories, and he set the pattern for these. His tales were all interesting, and amazingly convincing. Ford sent him wandering around the world in search of material, and he accumulated an immense stock of it. But most of his stock, in spite of his experience, was in his own head. In a talk between members of the Companion's writing staff, once, the remark was made that the paper had published tales of the deliverance of boys from desperate peril as against every known animal except the anteater. Stephens heard this, and he immediately wrote a thrilling story of an attack on a young man in the Brazilian forests by a swarm of anteaters; and it was one of the best adventure stories that the Companion ever printed. Objection was once made that the heroes of the paper's tales of deliverance were all boys or young men, whereupon Stephens sat down and wrote a serial about a girl who had taken out a homestead in North Dakota, in the days of Indian and outlaw perils in that region. It was written in the first person—that is, in the name of the heroine —and her name was put at the head of the tale as its author. The story made a great furore throughout the West, and the resourceful and courageous girl who had held down her claim in the midst of dreadful perils, received a number of actual proposals of marriage, all of which were sent to Stephens. Half the country took the story for an actual and authentic personal record. It was the very limit of convincingness.

Of course, since it was impracticable that sixty separate stories or serial installments in a year should be put forth under the name of a single writer, at least half of Stephen's contributions had to appear in the Companion under an assumed name. In this way, Stephens established a reputation as a story writer for at least half a dozen imaginary persons. He was therefore a whole syndicate of writers united in one body. All these, naturally, were "hired" by Ford in that memorable interview in 1871. Mr. Ford, in the meantime, always kept his eye closely on Stephens and the latter's plain Saxon style caused his employer a good deal of trouble. Mr. Ford did not like a plain Saxon style. He detested monosyllables. In one of his stories about a Maine boy who made his way in the world, Stephens once wrote, "Hiram got a job in a factory." Mr. Ford, in editing the story, changed this expression into "the young man obtained employment in a manufacturing establishment." Stephen's manuscript was always fiercely edited by Ford and the editorial assistants who had been trained in his methods. Stephens did not always like these changes—but hadn't he been "hired"? He never kicked at a system of editing which invariably made his stories less good than they were as he wrote them.

Stephen's talent was by no means limited to the concoction of juvenile adventures. Mr. Ford was at one time taken with a passion for sanitation. He began the publication of a weekly "health talk" article, and as he did not like the literary style of the doctors who then wrote such articles, he resolved to train Stephens for the purpose, and sent him to Boston University medical school, where he obtained the degree of M. D. After this Stephens wrote the health article for some years. His forte, so far as the Companion was concerned, was the adventure story. But the scientific bug had been planted in his brain. He became a scientific biologist, and all his later years were devoted to the production of philosophical works. He wrote many books of a peculiarly abstruse character, with such titles as "Pluricellar Man", "Natural Salvation", "Immortal Man", and so forth. These were all based on actual researches in a laboratory that he established near Norway Lake, in Maine, but they never made any impression in the scientific world. It was almost impossible to read any one of them. Perhaps a future generation will take them up and found a philosophical revolution on them. Up to date, the world prefers the anteater and other adventure stories.

Stephens was a close and accurate observer of nature—a characteristic which greatly enhanced the convincing quality of his writings. He knew intimately the habits of all the animals from which he so ingeniously rescued all his heroes. The Listener had many interesting conversations with him about ways of foxes, wolves, catamounts, lucyvees and other beasts of the New England woods. One particular subject of these conversations, as the Listener well remembers, was the "groaning' of our northern lakes when they were thickly covered with ice. Everyone who has lived by such a lake in winter is aware of the fact that on cold nights it emits a sullen, subterranean-like roar, emphasized by an occasional cracking sound. Stephens had studied this phenomenon and showed how it results from new freezings along the under side of the ice, which cause expansion and thereby strain and heave the ice above, causing readjustments and the dull booming sound noted. He was also an expert along many lines of natural history. And with it all he had a very amiable and genial personality, and was most emphatically a man to be remembered.

Voluminous Writer

Charles A. Stephens, whose death is recorded at his beautiful estate at Norway Lake, Maine, in his 84th year, is but a name to the present generation, but he was an author whose stories were read with avid interest by boys and girls years ago. Back in the days when a dollar meant something, when people lived in what today would be thought a primitive condition, and it was only a rare household that saw a daily newspaper, the Youth's Companion, published in Boston, was so widely circulated throughout New England that a large percentage of the young people saw the publication, as papers were "handed around" in those days.

Mr. Stephens was a physician by profession, holding an academic degree from Bowdoin and a medical degree from Boston University. He literally grew up around and within the Youth's Companion, becoming a contributor to that paper at an early age and continuing to write for it many years.

In his busy life he wrote more than 3,000 short stories of around 4,000 words each, more than 100 eight chapter serials and a long list of juvenile books which included "Camping Out", "Fox Hunting", the Knockabout club series and many others. Dr. Stephens' writings would not be rated as high class literature, but his stories were always wholesome, some of them actually inspiring to the youth of forty and more years ago and they were free from the sordidness and slime which characterizes so much of the present day fiction.

Dr. Stephens lived a long, busy and useful life, and there are many men on the downward slope of life today who will recall the thrill with which they looked forward to his next chapter in a serial in the Youth's Companion.

There have been several different ages given Dr. C. A. Stephens. He was born in Norway, Oct. 21, 1847, hence was 83 years, 11 months and 19 days.

THREE SPEAKERS AND A DEMONSTRATION

What governs the chances on an orchard paying you? Two things: namely, yield and the amount expended to make that fruit clean. The question of yield is up to the individual, but the question of insect and disease control is now very definitely a community problem. Old neglected apple trees were the defendants on trial Thursday, facing the charge of general contamination. Speakers were C. R. Phipps, Associate Entomologist of Maine Experiment Station, A. K. Gardner, Crops and Orchard Specialist, with the Extension Service and L. F. Livingston, manager of the Extension Section of the Dupont products company.

Mr. Phipps and Mrs. Gardner presented recent findings regarding the goings and comings of Mrs. Apple Maggot and her close relationship to the defendants on trial. Exhibit "A" showing of traps which were used to get the "low down" on Mrs. Maggot. This trial was held in the orchard of Gus Cloutier, on the right hand side of the road as you go up over the big hill out of Buckfield village toward Wilson Conant's.

Following this trial, Mr. Livingston took the jury to Mr. Wade Harris' farm to show the jury how to execute the defendants painlessly by the use of dynamite. Other methods of execution and slow death by torture were demonstrated. "Pest Elimination Meets Market Discrimination" is the slogan adopted by Buckfield orchardists.

EVA BILLINGS, WOODSTOCK 4-H CLUB MEMBER RELATES HER EXPERIENCES AT STATE 4-H CAMP

Due to the efforts of our State club leaders, and the directors of the Maine State Fair, over 120 boys and girls of the 4-H Clubs of Maine spent four and one-half days on the Maine State Fair grounds, which will go down in the history of club work as the first 4-H Club camp held in Maine.

Arriving at the fair grounds Sunday, we were met by Mr. Shibles, our state club leader, and by our chaperones. Our little encampment consisted of six tents: mess tent, boys' and girls' sleeping tents, assembly hall, headquarters and a hospital tent. There were so many girls that the mess tent had to be turned into sleeping quarters at night.

The speakers were Governor William Tudor Gardiner, A. L. Deering, State Extension Director, L. M. Carroll, President of the fair, and several others, all of which we enjoyed. Our meals were served us by the members of New Gloucester Grange. We lined up by counties and marched into the tent where we were served cafeteria style. Every day after breakfast and supper we had our assemblies, in the assembly tent. Here we sang songs, some of which were taught us by Jerry Dunn. "The Little Brown Soldier" "'Neath the Crust of the Old Apple Pie" were some of the popular ones.

EXTENSION SERVICE LAUNCHES SAFETY BULL PEN PROJECT

In building up a high producing dairy herd the most important factor is the sire. In order that we may discover and develop bulls that are capable of increasing production we must have the milk and butterfat records of several of their daughters. This means that these bulls must be kept until they are approximately two years of age so that a sufficient number of records can be obtained for proper appraisal.

A great many bulls have been proved in the past few years, unfortunately, too late to save many of these bulls had proved to be poor and before their value could be realized they were sent to the butcher and before their value came to a milking age.

Bulls that exercise regularly usually stay in service much longer, are more easily handled, and are less apt to become vicious and ill tempered.

To provide sufficient exercise a good sized paddock or exercising yard is necessary. This yard should be so constructed as to furnish every possible means of safety for attendants. The living pen, or box stall, should be so planned that the bull will have direct access to the exercise lot without the necessity of leading or handling.

Meetings will be held in several communities this winter, taking up the principles of breeding, use of the herediscope, exhibit of safety bull pens and a film showing safety bull pens in use.

Every day after breakfast and supper we had our assembly in the assembly tent. Here we sang songs, some of which were taught us by Lloyd Dunn. "The Little Brown Spinning Wheel," "Until the Crust of the Old Apple Pie" were some of the popular ones. The flag raising Monday was very impressive. The flag was loaned to us by the D. A. R. of Lewiston. They said it had seen two years service in the Revolutionary War. It was raised into place by a little girl who was a descendant of a Revolutionary soldier. As it neared the top a breeze caught it and flung its red and white stripes, while the boys and girls sang the Star Spangled Banner. After this, prayer was offered and we went back to our tents. On Tuesday we paraded in front of the grand stand. The girls wore their green and white uniforms and the boys wore their green suits. We halted in front of the grand stand and sung our state club song. After this we marched up on the stand to enjoy the races and vaudeville.

Wednesday morning we donned our uniforms and lining up two by two started up to Bates College. I should judge this was about a two mile hike. Then we were shown all over the college campus and buildings. Chase Hall, the library, the gym and other important buildings.

Club Group Gathered Around Camp Fire

Thursday night we held our campfire, dedicating the first 4-H Club camp. We were seated on a sloping bank facing the campfire, which was lighted by Mr Shibles. After he had talked to us, candles were given to each one, and each one holding a lighted candle over his head, we stood with our backs to the fire and sang, "Follow the Gleam". This service was very impressive and in memory of this we shall always keep our little green candles.

Club Members Perform Duties

But, please don't be deceived in thinking that this was all play with no work, because it wasn't. Every boy and girl had a duty to perform; such as guarding the tents, seeing to the cleanliness of the washroom, also the judging contests which were held on cattle raising, canning and sewing. We were also taught games and then told to teach them to each other. The last morning during assembly the man who did some singing in front of the grand stand came over and directed us in our club song and others. After this, cars were waiting to take us to Gulf Island Dam and the Auburn shoe factory. This was an interesting trip, taking us through places we had never been before.

In closing I wish to urge every boy and girl, as soon as he is ten years old to join a 4-H Club. Not only for the pleasure, but for the benefits received from it. I feel that during the four days spent at State Fair, I received several benefits. I made many valuable acquaintances. Perhaps I shall never see any of the boys and girls again, but I shall remember them. In a camp there is friendship and loyalty which can never be taken from us. I also learned to cooperate, to join in the singing and games with zest and enthusiasm. There are many, many more things that happened, but I shall leave them out, hoping that other 4-H members will go next year to find out for themselves.

Signed, Miss Eva Billings.

Miss Billings is a member of the Jolly Workers 4-H Club of Bryant Pond of which Mrs. Addelyn Mann is leader. She has been in club work for five years and has finished her project every year. This year she is taking the Room Improvement Project.

THE BROADCAST

By Frederick Marshall Davis

"Wait just a minute, I will lower the thing to the ground," a voice said, as I stood on the staircase that led to the crowded judges' stand in front of the grand stand, a few days ago, at the Andover fair.

We had already played, a few months previous, in the principal street at Andover, Maine, to a multitude of people, and, as agreed upon, we had returned to the fair. Norway was well represented at Andover, among the familiar faces were William Young, Grant Abbott, Guy Curtis, Llewellyn Cushman, Charles Bartlett, and H. F. Andrews, well known in Norway among prominent men, as a dealer in horses, with his son, Donald.

I had been invited where I stood near the microphone, accompanied by a limber wristed fiddler of the first water, who pulled out the notes of the old familiar tune, "Turkey in the Straw." By request, one or two other numbers were rendered while I stood tickling the banjo in a manner that perhaps could well be called "Nigger in a fit."

The fair coming to a close, we made a quick run to Island Pond, Vt., where I played that night, eighteen miles out, to the dedication of a new barn, with an orchestra led by a Mr. Cota, a violinist of note, who resided, until a short time ago, at South Paris.

It was our first trip to North Waterford fair, where it was held last week. Doc bent the iron bar several times with his jaw and had a very good sale of medicine. Expected business for this week, beginning Monday, Oct. 5th, includes one day at Buckfield street fair, and one day at Damariscotta, Me. Next week at Topsham ends the fair program for this season in Maine. Would say that plans are already underway where we expect to put on the full show on invitation at several towns in New England late this fall, under cover.

THE PICTURE I LOVE

Of all the seasons' pictures
That unroll on Nature's
There's one I love most dearly,
'Tis framed by the Evergreens.

Springtime woods are lovely
And Summer, too is fair
While Autumn's pageants
Are almost beyond compare.

But friends, have you ever seen
Of a flaming sunset
With pointed fir splitting
Their snow-decked spires on

And do you know the pleasure
Of a walk in the Winter
Neath snow-crowned fir and
Or at the foot of a Pine

And in the sheltered
Where rough winds are
Have you heard the soul of
Whisper to your own?

It tells me of life eternal,
God-given from above—
This is the picture I treasure
The one I most dearly
